

THE UNKNOWN DESTINATION

by Lewis Schofield (2004)

"Whoa, I`m falling....ahhhh!"

Lewis landed with a thud.

"That was close," he said, looking at the large steel object he almost hit. "What`s this?" he wondered.

"Looks like a control panel, Chief" said Elyse.

"Let`s take it for analysis," Lewis said, and off they went to have the object analysed.

Some time passed when Lewis ran into the room with the report. "Hey, look here, we have the preliminary report from the Commander. It looks as if this is some sort of machine from 100 years ago. We better go back and see what else we can find."

Elyse and Lewis left the office on their search. As they looked all over for more evidence of this previous world, they found more traces of civilization from over 100 years ago, things like gadgets, wires and bolts.

"I just have to wonder why this machine was stuck here," said Lewis.

Lewis and Elyse traveled back to the lab but something seemed to be controlling them. They almost skidded into the lab. They decided to start their own analysis and stuck the info into the PC.

"Mamma Mia!" shouted Lewis.

"What`s up, Lewis?" asked Elyse.

"Elyse, it looks like we have just uncovered a new computer drive. And this pen is dated 1902!"

"Let`s get this stuff outta here, before we get into any trouble" suggested Elyse.

The Commander reported back a week later. "The analysis is back and uh, well folks, it looks like an energizer of some sort."

"Let`s plug it in to the mainframe and see what happens," said Lewis

"What do you think is going on, Elyse?" asked Lewis.

"I have no idea, but I figured out that this gadget in my locker is actually a laser!"

ZAP -- POW -- ZABOOM! It burned a hole in the wall and much to their surprise an elevator shaft was on the other side.

Together, Lewis and Elyse climbed through the wall and down the shaft ... into the unknown destination.

© Lewis Schofield 2004
All Rights Reserved.

